InfoWorld Innovator's Award

I received an InfoWorld Innovator's Award this year, which surprised me and pleased me. The complete report is here.

The Innovator's Award article was very much abbreviated - the full interview is on Jon Udell's weblog. There are a quite a few people who have been fundamental to the development of XQuery, and this interview discusses some of the others.

And it's cool to work for a company that won three Innovator's Awards this year - Bill Cullen won for his work on the Sonic Enterprise Service Bus, and Mark Palmer won for his work on event stream processing in Web Services and RFID.

Do you have good study habits? Do you find it hard to concentrate on your homework? Do you get to class and not remember anything of what you studied the night before? If so, here are some tips to help your study:

 Tip 1: Set a time to study.

Many kids find it easiest to come home, have something to eat, and then study right away, but if you have other activities at that time you'll need to find what works for you.

 Tip 2: Study every day.

If you don't have homework to do, take a few minutes to review topics that you find hardest. This may sound boring, but it's good to get into the habit of doing it every day.

 Tip 3: Create your own study space.

If you don't have a desk in your room, or if your family is not quiet enough, think of going to the library.

 Tip 4: Don't do other things when you are studying.

Watching TV, fixing a snack, and talking on the phone distract you. Some people study with music playing. If it's just quieter music and doesn't make you play the drums on your books, it's probably not too distracting.

 Tip 5: Take notes.

If you have a lot of reading to do to prepare for a test, try taking notes. If not, you'll feel crazy.

Finally, ask for help if you need it. Teachers and friends will usually go over something with you again if you didn't quite "get it" the first time.

 distract: 使分心
squirrel: 松鼠
migration: 迁徙
